Background

Appetite for Change received $15,000 from the One Minneapolis Fund in 2014 for the Good Food Advocacy Campaign. This project works to build the leadership capacity of African-American and low-income individuals to lead the food movement, connect with other communities in Minneapolis and increase community and civic engagement around food issues. In the 2015 cycle of One Minneapolis Funding, Appetite for Change received $19,500 to continue work aimed at using food as a tool to build equity and increase civic engagement within the African American community in North Minneapolis.

Michele Horvitz, the founder and executive director of Appetite for Change will present an overview of their work.
